

Optical fiber biosensors for cancer biomarker detection—a review

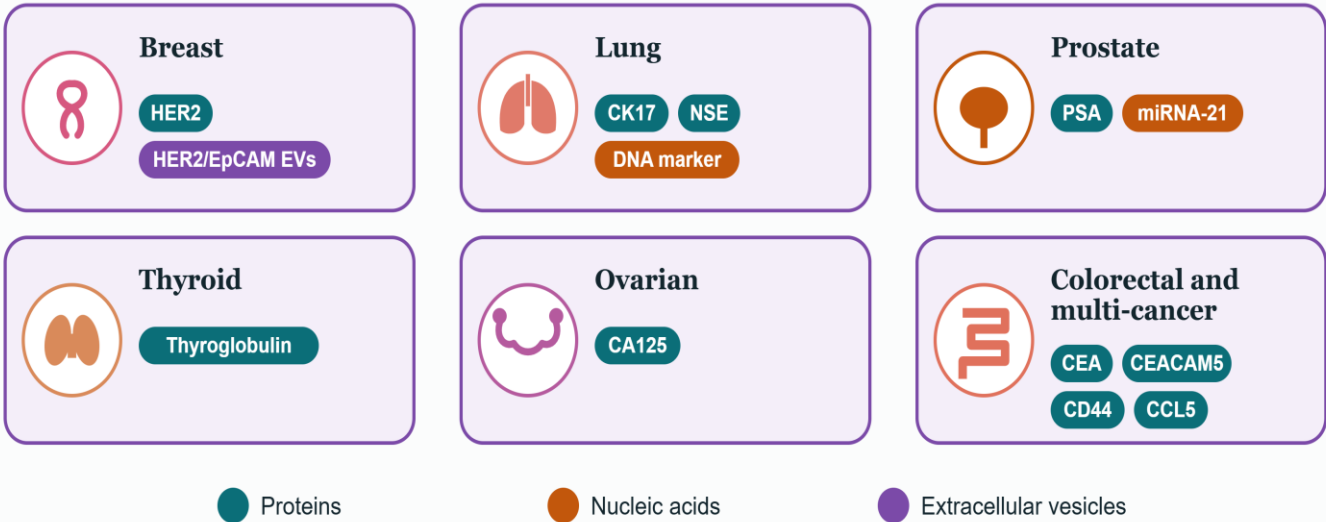

Muhammad Moazzam (Mphil Public health, MSc Biomedical Engg)
Office of Research, Innovation and Commercialization, Green International University, Lahore, Pakistan

Background

TARGETED CANCERS & BIOMARKERS

Methodology

References

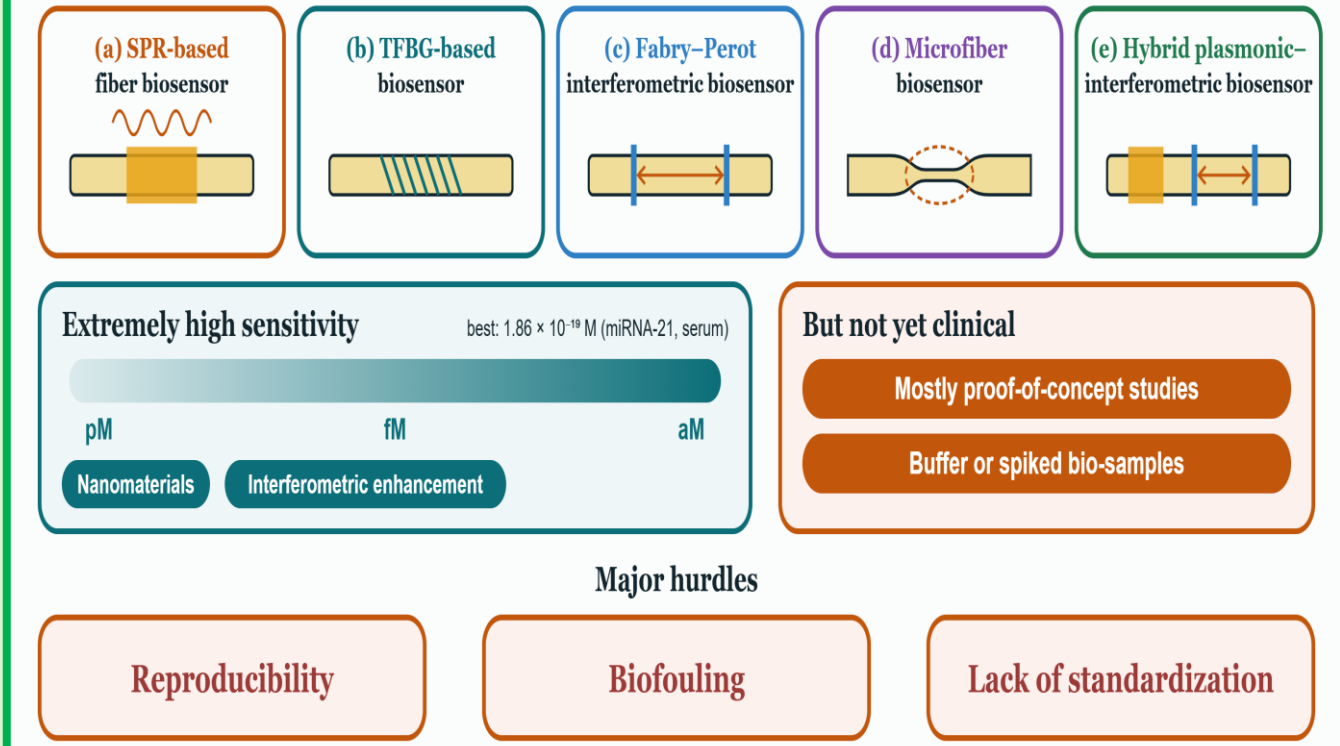

1. Bray F, Laversanne M, Sung H, Ferlay J, Siegel RL, Soerjomataram I, et al. Global cancer statistics 2022: GLOBOCAN estimates of incidence and mortality worldwide for 36 cancers in 185 countries. CA: Cancer J Clin. 2024;74(3):229–63. <https://doi.org/10.3322/caac.21834>.

2. Zhang W, Campbell DH, Walsh BJ, Packer NH, Liu D, Wang Y. Cancer-derived small extracellular vesicles: emerging biomarkers and therapies for pancreatic ductal adenocarcinoma diagnosis/prognosis and treatment. J Nanobiotechnol. 2022;20(1):446. <https://doi.org/10.1186/s12951-022-01641-0>.

3. Nurlankyzy M, Kantoreyeva K, Myrkhieva Z, Ashikbayeva Z, Baiken Y, Kanayeva D, et al. Label-free optical fiber biosensor for the detection of CD44-expressing breast cancer cells. Sensing Bio-Sensing Res. 2024;44:100661.

4. Duan Y, Jin J, Yang S, Fan X, Du Y, Tong X, et al. Plasmonic fiber optic sensing platform for point-of-care pharmacokinetic monitoring of platinum chemotherapeutics: toward ultratrace multi-omics precision chemotherapy management. ACS Sens. 2025;10(8):6010–9. <https://doi.org/10.1021/acssens.2c00661>.

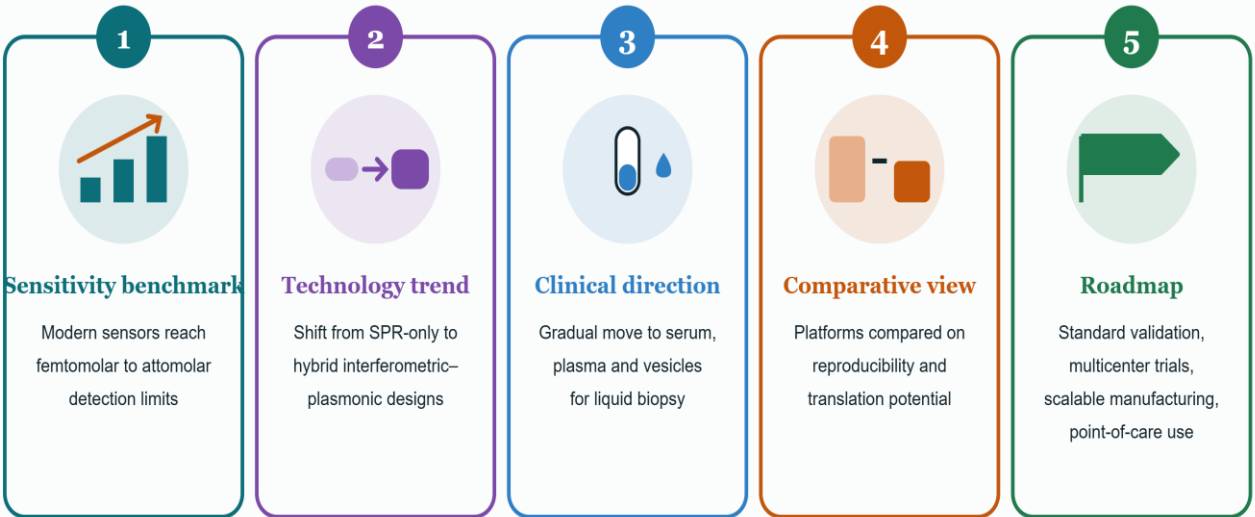

Results

Conclusion

Overall, optical fiber biosensors show great promise for the next decade of cancer diagnostics, especially in the field of liquid biopsy, yet they have not been thoroughly validated clinically and integrated into routine diagnostic workflow.

KEY BENEFITS OF THIS REVIEW

An analytical, technological and translational view of optical fiber biosensors for cancer diagnosis

Contact and collaboration

Contact for questions and research collaborations
mmoazzam739@gmail.com